Chinese New Year fun ends

with oranges and cabbage

Tradition, Good luck comes in the form of fruits and vegetables.

There were the popping firecrackers, festive crowds, brightly colored lion costumes and steady drum beat.

And cabbage. In the streets, on the floors of the shops, in the 6-foot snow and ice mounds. Cabbage was everywhere for the Chinatown Lion Dance Parade on Sunday, a celebration of Chinese New Year.

"It's a good luck thing, but it ends up being piles of cabbage everywhere," said Bethany Phong, a 28-year-old part-time journalist who has tried to attend the celebration every year since she was a child.

As marchers paraded in teams through the closedoff streets, some in lion costumes, and drummers beat time, shop owners fed the gold, red and orange "lions" cabbage and an orange for good luck. While the lion dancers chucked the oranges into the crowd, where they're a coveted good luck token, cabbage leaves ended up everywhere.

"I love it," said Jordan Gibson, a 25-year-old comic book artist originally from Austin, Texas. "We don't have any traditions where I'm from, we just hang out or whatever, so it's nice to see something that's fun, that people do every year, that's a tradition."

Peiming Lu, a 29-year-old interior designer living in Boston, said the celebration was foreign to her growing up in

"It's cool, I'm Chinese and I don't even see this back in China," she said. "I think this is something that goes back to the old Chinese culture. I believe my parents saw this when they were little. Me? I never saw this. We saw fireworks. That was it."

Resigned. Head of Gov. Charlie Baker's MBTA inquiry steps down

Former Boston Redevelopment Authority chief Paul Barrett will no longer lead Gov. Charlie Baker's examination into the beleaguered MBTA.

The Boston Globe reported Saturday that Barrett resigned Friday after the paper questioned him about $200,000 in unpaid federal income taxes. Barrett told the paper he regretted disclosing to Baker his tax payment difficulties stemming from a failed Cape Cod real estate deal and the purchase of a $1.8 million Cohasset home, but reportedly said "almost all of these matters were settled a while ago."

Barrett was tapped by the governor on Feb. 20 to lead a review of the MBTA's operations following weeks of shutdowns, delays and equipment failures as the city was gradually buried under more than 7 feet of snow and shivered in subfreezing temperatures.

"The governor is disappointed that these issues were not disclosed, and now looks forward to the MBTA panel continuing their important charge under new leadership," Jim Conroy, a senior adviser to the governor, said in a statement.

Administration officials say Massport aviation division chief financial officer Brian McMorrow and former New York Metropolitan Transportation Authority CEO Katherine Lapp will now lead the panel.

Baker charged the panel with reporting on a performance review of the MBTA by the end of March, looking at its core functions and comparing it to other transit systems to gauge its governance, financing and capital planning. suns

More snow...

Expect 4 to 6 inches more of snow

And you thought it was over. Yes, Boston's cartoonish winter could see more snow Sunday into Monday morning. The National Weather Service's forecast is calling for 4-6 inches of accumulation for the city of Boston and eastern Massachusetts.

The snow was likely to continue falling from Sunday evening until around 2 a.m. Monday. Temperatures are expected to remain in the 20s, according to the National Weather Service. Winds will be between 5 and 7 mph. METRO

St. Paddy's parade

Weather could change route

Snowmageddon may reroute Boston's biggest annual party, the St. Patrick's Day Parade in Southie, unless enough snow melts to clear parade routes and sidewalks, The Boston Globe reports.

The parade could even be postponed.

Seven and a half feet of snow have so narrowed sidewalks and complicated parking across the city that organizers are struggling to determine if South Boston can handle the 600,000 to 1 million revelers who typically attend the parade. METRO

Canton collapse. Early morning timing of disaster fortunate, says fire chief

It might have been a heartbreakingly "different situation" if the collapse of a Canton ice rink roof occurred two hours later.

That's the assessment of Canton Fire Chief Charlie Doody after the roof of the Metropolis Rink on Route 138 gave way to weeks of record snow.

It was 6:45 a.m. and 10 kids, their parents and coaches were in the facility when disaster struck.

Two hours later, the building would have been

"It was a very close call. Close for them because they were scheduled to be on the ice just before the collapse. At 9 a.m. there were going to be 200 to 300 kids." Doody told The Patriot Ledger. "We could have potentially had a very different situation."

Peewee hockey coach Mike Fanizzi of Norwood described to the paper how the resulting gush of air from one third of the roof falling in sent him flying across the rink.

"I started screaming. Everybody started moving off the ice. Our stomachs were turning," he said.

Ex-NFL star sent urgent text on night of murder

Former National Football League star Aaron Hernandez texted a friend to "hurry" in the hours before prosecutors say the pair and another man murdered an associate in an industrial park in 2013, according to testimony on Friday.

Ricardo Leal, a records custodian for Sprint Telecommunications, identified text messages between Hernandez and Ernest Wallace in records and read them aloud from Hernandez's Blackberry phone, which prosecutors showed in court.

Hernandez, 25, a former tight end for the New England Patriots, is accused of murdering Odin Lloyd, a semiprofessional football player who was dating his fiancée's sister. It is the first of two murder trials he faces this year.

Court. Boston bomber trial can stay in city

A U.S. appeals court on Friday ruled the trial for the accused Boston Marathon bomber can go ahead in the city, over attempts from his attorneys to change the venue on the basis an impartial jury could not be seated so close to the site of the 2013 attack.

The split three-judge panel of the U.S. First Circuit Court of Appeals backed District Judge George O'Toole, who has three times rejected pleas by Dzhokhar Tsarnaev's lawyers to move the trial out of Boston, where the bombing killed three people and injured 264.

"We are unable to conclude that it is clear and indisputable that the petitioner cannot receive a fair trial by an impartial jury in the Eastern Division of Massachusetts," the judges wrote in the 80-page opinion.

The final phase of jury selection is set to take place on Tuesday.

Kid Rock's Instagram under siege by Beyonce fans

Kid Rock is learning the hard way that you do not want to cross Beyonce — or her legion of fans. Rock had some pretty unkind things to say about the "Single Ladies" singer's musical legacy and physical attractiveness during a rant to Rolling Stone: "Beyonce, to me, doesn't have a f—ing 'Purple Rain,' but she's the biggest thing on Earth," he says. "How can you be that big without at least one 'Sweet Home Alabama' or 'Old Time Rock & Roll'? People are like, 'Beyonce's hot. Got a nice f-ing ass.' I'm like, 'Cool, I like skinny white chicks with big tits.' Doesn't really f-ing do much for me."

Charming as always. So what did Beyonce's fans do? Descend on Rock's instagram account and flood the comments of countless photos with bee emojis. It's actually kind of beautiful, but still probably more attention than Rock deserves.

Michelle Rodriguez is sorry for something again

So what is Michelle Rodriguez apologizing for this time? Oh. just a little rant to TMZ outside a restaurant about the trend of updating comic book superhero characters with non-white actors. "That's the dumbest thing I've ever heard," Rodriguez said to a question about whether she would be playing the Green Lantern. "Because of this whole, like, 'minorities in Hollywood' thing, it's so stupid. Like, stop stealing all the white people's superheroes. Like, make up your own. You know what I'm saying?"

Apparently not enough people did actually know what she was saying, because Rodriguez quickly took to Facebook with a video apologizing for her comments and adding a bit of clarity to the idea she was, like, trying to get across.

Michelle Rodriguez wants us to write our own mythology and stare at her cat.

"I guess it got taken out of context because a lot of people got offended or whatever," she says in the iPhone video shot while snug in her bed, a cat curled up beside her. "Ultimately at the end of the day there's a language, and the language that you speak in Hollywood is successful franchises. I think there are many cultures in Hollywood that are not white that could come up with their own mythology." She also says something about the Fountain of Life and calls turning white characters black "lazy." So ... we're all good now?

Olivia Wilde: Head of the 'Logic Police'

Interview. The actress talks about sticking to the rules on "The Lazarus Effect" and acting while 81/2 months pregnant.

Olivia Wilde has played computer programs ("Tron: Legacy") and an alien (in a movie for which this would be a spoiler), but in real life, she's unusually personable, talkative and friendly. She gets to play both sides of the fence in "The Lazarus Effect," a horror film in which she's a brilliant scientist experimenting with a serum that can bring the dead back to life one that winds up being used on her when she's accidentally killed. Horror ensues.

You've said you're very analytical when it comes to scripts. How did that apply to this project?

Even for a movie like this, I tend to get really analytical with the material. My nickname on a few films has been "The Logic Police." Even with this film, where logic seemingly should not count, I still held everyone to the rules we established. That's how I view films. When I watch something, I will buy anything. Any kind of story you want to tell me, I'm happy to watch — as long as it's consistent with the rules you lay out.

A lot of horror films about scientists tend to be anti-science. but this tries not to be.

We didn't want it to seem horribly irresponsible of them. It clearly comes from a passionate place. If you think about how much has been developed in the last 50 years, it's insane. Triple bypass surgeries happen on a daily basis today; we're used to hearing about people surviving. If you went back and told your great-grandparents that, they'd think you were insane. The idea of a Lazarus serum is

A project like this must lead to freaky research.

YouTube is always a place where I wind up in deep, deep holes at four in the morning. You can find anything there. I watched a lot of surgeries, I read a lot about the concept of bringing someone back to life versus keeping people alive, about extending life. I read a few dozen cases of people who flatlined during surgery and came back and what they claimed to have experienced.

Does that interest come from your years on "House"? Yeah. I really love learning about medical technology, and I have such respect for doctors. They're superheroes.

Bonus question

Acting while with child

"You can't tell when you watch the movie, but there were three shoots we did where I am 81/2 months pregnant," Wilde tells us. "It was kind of awesome because my emotions were so close to the surface. I felt capable of anything, any human emotion, from misery to rage to extreme happiness. ... Since having my son, I feel I'm a better actress. But yeah, I was doing some shots with this huge belly. You'll notice me sometimes saying my lines over my shoulder in a weird way. That would be why."

Aydian Dowling: 'See the life I live'

You may find the photo to your right familiar. Adam Levine snapped an identically posed photo with his ex-girlfriend Anne Vyalitsyna in 2011. But this remake of the famous snap in FTM magazine is different because the model, Aydian Dowling, is transgender.

Dowling spoke to Metro about his experience recreating a photo of the music industry's alpha male and what that means for the trans community.

How did you end up doing this shoot?

Jason Robert Ballard, who runs FTM, asked for me to be on the cover, and he showed me a photo of Adam Levine naked and said he really wanted to recreate the photo. I've put up pictures of me shirtless, and he said, "I see similarities; I want to recreate this photo. How powerful would that be for a trans man be naked next to [a photo of] Adam Levine, and you couldn't tell the difference? What a way to kind of change everyone's assumption of what a trans man is supposed to look like." I'm a pretty vulnerable guy, so I was a little nervous about it. I asked my wife how she would feel, and we thought the cause was better than the insecurity.

What was it like?

It was cool. A little nervewracking. Even though I was naked in front of other people, I covered up until the actual shot was taken, so that was definitely interesting. It was fun. Who wouldn't want to be given an opportunity to say something and have it be

When did you transition?

I've been documenting on blogs and YouTube for the last five years, and I still do vlog about my transition, so I've been identifying and been in a hormonal transition for five years. Five years in October is my date.

How long did it take for you to feel comfortable in your own skin?

I think that being comfortable with myself happened before I was comfortable with my body. So when I first decided that was how I truly identified and that's what I connect with, within a few months of coming out and having support from my friends and family, I felt like I was worth living a life, even if it was a transgender life. With the hormones, after a year or two. I was able to recognize the guy in the mirror. The body was starting to match the mind, so I had to build a confidence in that body, and that kind of happened through just putting myself out there on YouTube and allowing people to see the life I live and finding other people in the same situation. Top surgery made me feel more comfortable with my body, and I like to weight-train and live a healthy lifestyle, and that forces you to get comfortable with your own body.

What's the feedback been on your photo?

Really good. I got nothing but positive responses. There's always somebody who's going to say something negative, and a lot of times it's just a reflection of themselves, but it's been really good, i couldn't be happier with the positive response, and people who understand what the picture is about see it for what it is.

How does a project like this help change perceptions about trans people?

Shoots like this just kind of normalize transgender people and tackle someone's uninformed and uneducated guess on what a trans person would look like, and they think, "Wow, I could be sitting next to a trans person on the subway, or the guy who opened the door for me could have been trans." Résumés. Here are the most overused buzzwords on LinkedIn. Be honest, how many are you using right now?

Are you a driven and passionate professional who is motivated to use your extensive experience in your future position? You are so not alone.

In fact, the good folks at LinkedIn have revealed just how unoriginal that description is. The business-oriented social networking site recently released the ten most overused buzzwords used in over 332 million profiles worldwide. "Motivated" and "passionate" topped the list, with "expert" coming in at number ten.

Catherine Fisher, LinkedIn Career Expert, suggests that now is a perfect time to do a bit of a profile overhaul and start weeding out the most popular buzzwords from your profile. "But don't go to your trusty thesaurus and replace one buzzword with another lackluster adjective," Fisher writes in a blog post.

"Rather, include examples that illustrate how you're motivated. How did your motivation ultimately drive business results?"

Job seekers should be particularly thoughtful about their word choices. Remember, the more you use a buzzword, the more meaningless it becomes. LARSHMIGANDHI

Leonard Nimoy brought the Final Frontier to viewers and inspired the world

I have read with much sadness, the news that Leonard Nimoy has passed

This brings a tear to most Trekkies like myself who grew up with the adventures of "Star Trek."

In the '60s, Leonard Nimoy portrayed with such dedication the respected and revered character of Mr. Spock, a role that would make him famous. Space the final frontier — has lost another good soul.

The Starship Enterprise lived on in the 1970s with a number of "Star Trek" conventions, one of a number I attended.

At one, I met Leonard Nimoy/Mr. Spock, and he read to us some of his published poetry, which we enjoyed very much.

I had the opportunity to speak to him and he told me there were plans in the making for a "Star Trek" movie because of the series increase in popularity.

I found him very personable and kind to have spoken to me.

Now the rest is history and Nimoy, as Mr. Spock, had a career where no man has gone before.

He was an actor, writer, poet, director, singer and the list goes on.

Everyone of us Trekkies loved him for helping to create such an interest in space exploration — that was just awesome.

In Nimoy's last tweet he said," A life is like a garden, perfect moments can be had, but not preserved, except in memory."

That is so true. In the end. I believe our creator might have said, "Angel Gabriel, beam Leonard Nimoy straight up to heaven for a life well lived!"

ROUSEY AT ABSOLUTE PEAK OF HER FIGHTING POWERS

Things that last slightly longer than a Ronda Rousey fight:

1. A Rick Pitino sexual encounter (estimated 15 seconds)

2. The appearance of a retraction story on ESPN .com regarding Deflate-gate (estimated 23 seconds) 3. A Derrick Rose comeback effort (estimated 5-10 minutes)

The old fear with purchasing Mike Tyson boxing payper-views was that you weren't going to get anywhere close to your money's worth if you were a fan of sporting events that lasted longer than an eye-blink. UFC smartly has content ready to roll out in case of a short main event, but it's going to become increasingly difficult to roll out semi-fresh content as long as Rousey stays in the game. In case you stepped outside for a smoke, Rousey defeated Cat Zingano via armbar submission in just 14 seconds Saturday night at UFC 184. Rousey is now a perfect 11-0 and the 28-year-old is showing no signs of slowing down. Cristiane "Cyborg" Justino is the next obvious opponent for Rousey, but she is not in Rousey's weight class, weighing in 10 pounds heavier than Rousey.

"[Justino] can make 135 pounds. She definitely can," Rousey told MMA-Junkie.com. "The thing is, someone that cheats and makes things easier for themselves is always gong to try and make things easier for themselves ... Stop taking f-ing steroids and make weight."

If you want the real dirt on tight-lipped Seahawks running back Marshawn Lynch, don't turn your dial away from NTV Spor, the Turkey version of ESPN. Lynch told the network about Super Bowl XLIX's conclusion, "I would be lying if I didn't tell you that I was expecting the ball. Yes, I was expecting the ball. But in life, these things happen. ... When you look at me and you let me run that ball in, I am the face of the nation. You know, MVP of the Super Bowl, that's pretty much the face of the nation at that point of time ... But would I love to had the ball in? Yes, I would have ... But the game is over, and I am in Turkey."
